My daughter was diagnosed with Tetralogy of Fallot in utero at 25 weeks. She had a normal birth and a timeline of 6 months was given for her first surgery. However, she had a cyanotic episode at her 1-week checkup, and at 9 days old, had open heart surgery to do a full correction. Now she visits her cardiologist annually, but she is an otherwise thriving 9 year old who loves reading, learning about animals, and playing with friends. She will need a valve replacement in her teens, and the hope is that the ongoing research and innovation made possible by events like the Heart Mini will mean that she (and others!) can undergo this procedure in a minimally invasive manner when the time comes. Thank you for your participation!
